

BOOK PROMOTION SECRET STASH

WWW.TANDEMSERVICESINK.COM

Every time you release a book, you need to go through this list to make sure your new book is added to all the right places.

- Claim it on your Amazon author page (authorcentral.amazon.com). While you're there, make sure this page is updated and optimized. Is it linked to your website? Have you added your relevant bio, author photo, video? Make use of the this page.
- BookBub. Create an author page here, not just a reader page. And then ask your readers to follow you here and leave reviews. Bookbub will send them an email when you have a new release (follow yourself so you can see it!).
- Goodreads. Just like BookBub, you'll need to create an author account. You may have to request your book to be added to your account each time if it doesn't show up right away. Your readers can also follow you here and leave reviews.
- On your book pages for Amazon, make sure they have linked the ebook and paperback versions. It's supposed to happen automatically, but if it doesn't after a week, email them through your Author Central account.
- If you are writing a series, make sure the books appear together on the series page. If they do not, email Amazon through your Author Central account.
- If you are selling your books on Amazon, you should also be an affiliate. Use your affiliate link when you send people the link about your books. Not only will you make a bit on the sale of your book, you'll get a percentage of everything they buy after clicking on your link for the next 24 hours. Every little bit helps.
- Reviews! Ask, ask, ask! They are so important to the launch of a new book, so ask everyone to leave a review.
- Promo sites: The best sites can change often and depend on your genre. Reedsy has an updated list that you should check out before each launch or promo. <https://blog.reedsy.com/book-promotion-services/>
